Dealing From Crooked Faro Box
John D. Hill Jr., Secretary to Deputy Commissioner Flynn, illustrates its workings in court.

GAMBLERS DODGE JAIL BY PLEADING GUILTY UNDER FLYNN'S EYES

Frightened When They See Deputy Commissioner on the Bench Ready to Display Crooked Gambling Devices.

ESCAPE PRISON TERMS BY CONFESSING IN COURT.

Judge Rosalsky Warns All That if They Violate Paroles Severe Sentences Will Be Imposed.

Frightened by Deputy Commissioner Flynn's threat to have his secretary, John D. Hill Jr., demonstrate in court with the crooked gambling apparatus found in his raids, indicted gamblers almost ran over each other in their eagerness to plead guilty to-day before Judge Rosalsky, in General Sessions. The pleas of six were accepted. The other cases went over until Friday or later.

In each case Judge Rosalsky suspended sentence and paroled the confessed gamblers in the custody of Deputy Commissioner Flynn, with orders to report to the Deputy Commissioner at such times as he should designate. The Judge added the threat that should Mr. Flynn report their conduct as unsatisfactory in any particular, the Judge would at once sentence them to two years in prison and to pay a fine of $1,000.

Hundreds of gamblers who have not yet been visited by the Deputy Commissioner in his raids crowded into the seats before Judge Rosalsky and jammed tight the space for standing room at the back of the court. Scores of others thronged the nearby corridors.

They were a dependent lot. As soon as it was known that Deputy Commissioner Flynn himself was to sit on the bench before Judge Rosalsky, and the terms of the acceptance of the sentence, they began to murmur bitter things.

Why They Murmured.
"The Judge says he will sentence every man who stands trial and is convicted for the limit," they said. "He also says that he will suspend sentence if a man pleads guilty; meantime he puts that man bound hand and foot into the commissioner's hands to use as a 'sucker pigeon,' a procurer of evidence against other gamblers. If the paroled man's conduct does not suit Flynn, the river he goes for a year. The Judge is showing by his conduct in asking the commissioner to sit with him that their chance of freedom is perfect. A fine chance the gambler has."

Each gambler, as his name was called, and his lawyer appeared for him and made a special plea that "this man at least was operating an honest gambling machine."

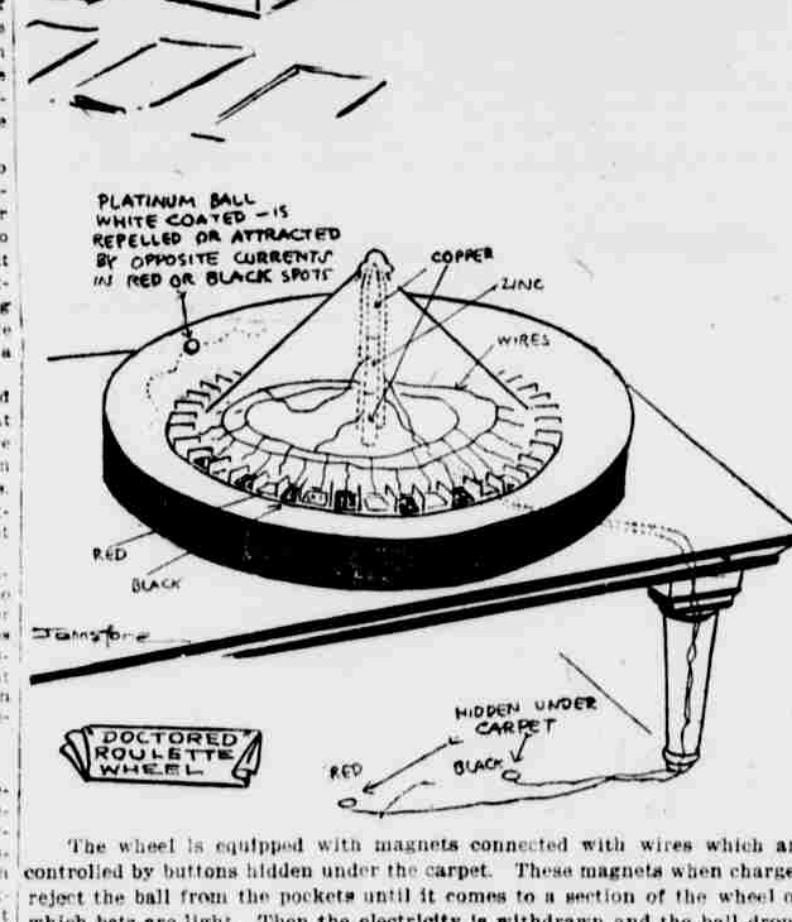

Besides the attitude of the Judge, the grim smile of Mr. Flynn, there was an impressive exhibition of gambling apparatus in the ante-room. In fact, it was the six crooked "top-balance" dice, deal boxes seized in recent raids. These were draped tables covered with crooked dice. There were roulette layouts. The exhibit did not include the wheel which was found to be equipped with electric wires and a platinum ball by which the fall of the ball was to be unfairly influenced. It was promised that this would be shown later.

First Case Called.
The first case moved for trial by Assistant District Attorney Buckner and Brothers was that of Samuel Sager, one of three men captured in a place reported to be owned by "Stoney" Meville, No. 112 West Forty-fifth street, on the night of Feb. 22.

An exhibit in this case Mr. Flynn produced one of the six crooked dice boxes found in his series of raids, as was also a platinum ball by which the fall of the ball was to be unfairly influenced. It was promised that this would be shown later.

PAINTED POST BANKER CAUGHT AFTER 5-YEAR HUNT
Found Here in Responsible Position and Arrested on Old Warrant.

After a five year search the Sheriff of Steuben County, N. Y., to-day located and arrested John L. Caven, once the proprietor of two private banking institutions at Painted Post and Oneonta, who, it is charged, ran a bank with the deposits of the two banks amounting to many thousands of dollars.

Caven was found living under his right name and occupying the responsible position of general manager and treasurer of the New York Central Storage Company, which has big warehouses in One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street.

Two days ago Sheriff Milton W. Davidson got word that Caven was in New York. The traced and yellow warrant was dug out of the pigeonhole in which it has been resting for five years, and the Sheriff, conspicuously displaying his badge of office and armed to the teeth to protect himself in the great city where crime waves rage, boarded the train at Painted Post.

The Sheriff arrived this morning and went to the office of the New York Central Storage Company. Caven was not in, but the Sheriff searched around till noon when Caven, wearing a new apron coat and smoking a fat cigar, drove up in his auto.

"You're under arrest," announced Sheriff Davidson. Caven didn't seem to be worried. He just puffed his cigar and demanded to know by what authority.

"I am the Sheriff of Steuben County and I've got a warrant for you," Davidson announced, displaying the warrant and his badge of office.

After telephoning to his lawyers and George Pierce, president of the company, Caven got into his machine and escorted the Sheriff to Police Headquarters. He will be taken back to Painted Post to-morrow.

According to the story told by Sheriff Davidson, Caven formerly worked for Reno B. Billington at No. 45 Broadway. About six years ago he went to Steuben County and started the banks at Painted Post and Oneonta. The firm name was John L. Caven & Co., bankers, and the sign on the windows announced that the capital of the institutions was $20,000.

After a few months Caven disappeared. It is said that at the same time the banks' deposits disappeared. Caven was indicted and the warrant issued. It was learned to-day that since he left Painted Post Caven has been living with his father-in-law, Fred Adkins, at No. 90 West One Hundred and Eighty-fourth street. He has been connected with the storage company for about eight months.

In reply, President Taft said that the people of the United States hoped fervently that harmony would soon prevail.

Leopard Tears Boy's Arm in Moving Picture Show.
By the quick action of Louis DeLorme, stage manager of the Edison moving picture and vaudeville house at No. 42 and 43 Clinton street, 34-year-old Harry, a curly boy of No. 41 Clinton street, was hurt to-day having a leg in a leopard's mouth. DeLorme, who was in a leopard's cage, was attacked by the animal's jaws open with a fire stick and pushed it back into the cage, between the bars of which it had reached out and grabbed the youngster.

Railroad Official's Leg Cut Off.
Charles H. Heman, general manager of the New York Central Railroad, was run down by a train at Brewster on the Harlem Division to-day afternoon. His left leg was caught in a truck and cut off. A medical team was made up and Mr. Heman was rushed to St. Luke's Hospital in this city, where an amputation of the leg was made.
